Brown oak

Brown oak is from an Oak tree where the timber is naturally coloured by the fungus Fistulina hepatica, commonly called the beefsteak fungus due to its blood red colour. Often mature trees with a branch which has fallen off will attract the fungus and the colouring starts at the 'wound' and slowly penetrates the tree, so there may be a mix of white and brown in some trees, running to solid brown eventually.

This means some tops can be all brown and others partially brown like the above right picture.

Brown oak is rare to discover and valuable as such.

Oak will get darker with age.
